INTRODUCTION

It's a story of one red man. In fact, he's not a man at all, he represents a part of population - the people, that are not able to hold on to the speed of ("contemporary") world. He is kinda outdated. (has no wristwatch, has cockoo's clock instead of digital and analog ones, that the other people have)

In a short movie, we will be able to see one of "his" typical days. Frames of the movie change quickly and show him in his usual daily situations. But he is everywhere the last one, cause he didn't set up his clock "in the morning". Therefore he is not able to do what the others are. In the end we discover, that when he once lost contact with the speed of "the others", that he's not able to get to contact with modern life anymore...

At the background, there is hidden the other and even more important aspect of our world. It's a presentation of our world, that is driven by time more than by anything else. Time is here shown as a rule created by people itself. It's described here maybe likke an exaggeration, but some of extreme situations as presented in a movie might remind us our own parts of life and should make us to stop at least for a little while...
